TRW Automotive plans to close Toledo, Ohio facility

Livonia, Mich., May 4, 2007 – TRW Automotive U.S. LLC, a subsidiary of TRW Automotive Holdings Corp. (NYSE:TRW), today announced the planned closure of its Toledo, Ohio facility. This planned closure is a result of the anticipated loss of the suspension module business which TRW Automotive formerly supplied for the Jeep Liberty in Toledo. This business was awarded to Dana Corp. in 2005, and production of the new generation Liberty begins soon.

The final closure of the plant is expected to take place at the end of June, 2007. At that time the remaining 53 employees at the plant will be permanently laid off.

"The plan to close this facility is in no way a reflection of the workforce in Toledo or the plant's performance," said Ron Muckley, vice president of operations for the TRW North America Braking and Suspension business. "It is simply a matter that we did not win the next generation contract and do not have enough alternative module business in the Toledo area to justify keeping the plant open."

TRW plans to assist its workers in transitioning to new employment through outplacement support and job training programs.
